

Admission video helps tell the St. Andrew's story

Gregory Doyle, Dec 14 2009

The new St. Andrew's admission video has gone "live" on the School's web site. Filmed throughout the 2008-2009 school year, the video is a powerful and magnificent exploration of the St. Andrew's School community.

When Tim Wainwright '83 and Michael Whalen '84 co-produced St. Andrew's School's 75th anniversary video in 2004, it became clear to the School that they should produce the next admission video. Joined by Caroline Rumsey Paxton '83, their collaborative talents and lifelong passion for St. Andrew's were brought to fruition in a magnificent exploration of the School community today. The School thanks Tim, Caroline and Michael for their hard work, long hours and clear vision of the beauty and mission of St. Andrew's School.

Tim Wainwright works with his company, Icon Films, specializing in creating television commercials, corporate image films and music videos. Caroline Rumsey Paxton has been writing and producing marketing, training and promotional videos for over 20 years. She recently ventured into the exciting world of documentary film making with her company, Paxton Productions, which she has found wonderfully challenging and rewarding. Michael Whalen is a former member of the St. Andrew's Board of Trustees and a two-time Emmy-award winning film and TV composer and music supervisor.
